

Absolutely not!!!! There is no place in an airplane (except perhaps the lavatory) where a person can privately talk on a cellular phone. Other passengers should not be subjected to the chatter of individuals on cellular phones, or incessant ringing of phones for incoming calls.

Experience in public places on the ground has shown that cellular phone users have no concept of the idea of common courtesy.

It may not be in the FCC's purview to consider passenger safety on airlines, but I am sure that allowing cellular phone use on airplanes will increase incidents of air rage, and result in increased incidents of passenger conflicts because users are discourteous about cellular phone use.

DO NOT LIFT THE BAN!!!
